Circular Walks – number 143

Berden and Stocking Pelham – 4.9 miles (8 kms)

This countryside walk passes through the parishes and villages of Berden in Essex and Stocking Pelham in Hertfordshire. It also goes through a few fields in the parish of Brent Pelham & Meesden. The route is on quiet lanes and footpaths that are generally well surfaced but with some stretches that can be muddy at times. There are no stiles. There is nowhere to purchase food or drink along the way.

Start and finish: The walk starts and finishes in the village of Berden, about 200 yards south of the village sign, on The Street, close to the start of the drive to Berden Church. There is usually space to park considerably along this road.

Ordnance Survey Grid Reference: TL469296 - Postcode: CM23 1AU – what3words: hubcaps.summaries.grins

The route can be followed on Ordnance Survey Explorer Map 194.

A diagram of the route is provided at the end of the description.

Before setting off, and while boots are still clean, please take this opportunity to visit Berden's parish church, dedicated to St Nicholas. The building is listed at Grade I. It dates from the 12th century, has a Norman nave, 13th-century chancel and 15th-century tower. Inside you will find a fine embroidery completed in 2000 AD and depicting many of the parish's buildings and activities. In the churchyard, you may be able to find the gravestone of Henry Trigg. He was the parish constable in 1814 when he was shot dead by burglars from Bishop's Stortford. His gravestone is at the far end of the churchyard, on the left beneath a tree. In 2025 it looked rather sad, leaning and covered in moss.

Return to The Street. When the church drive reaches the road, note the building immediately opposite, Church View Cottage. It displays the coat of arms of Christ's Hospital, a charity school also known as the Bluecoat School. Christ's Hospital owned property in the village in the 19th and early 20th century. Now, turn right, heading south.

Soon, we turn right up the drive towards Berden Hall and The Granary. The drive is also a public footpath up to the gate ahead. The house immediately on the left also has a Christ's Hospital coat of arms. The path turns left just before the gate to Berden Hall, but it gets rather overgrown so we will turn around here. Berden Hall is another property that was once owned by Christ's Hospital. This substantial red-brick house was built around 1580 and is distinguished by the three gables on each side of the building. The house has changed hands quite often: in the later 19th century its owner, one Edward Roberts, farmed half of the parish. Ownership may change again soon – in 2025 the house and 16 acres of land were offered for sale at £4million. The present owners kindly host Berden's annual fete.

Just before the gate to Berden Hall, we turn around and retrace to the road. We turn right to continue in a southerly direction.

Further along the lane, on the left, we pass a pair of red-brick houses, also with the Christ's Hospital coat of arms, dated 1864.

Soon afterwards, the lane turns left but we keep straight ahead, signposted to Brick House End. Soon pass beneath the electricity transmission line – we will meet it again later.

After a long, gentle climb, we pass a pond on the left in the garden of The Crump, a thatched, former farmhouse from the 16th or 17th century, now extended and modernised. Out of site, behind The Crump, there is an ancient earthwork which is now protected as a Scheduled Monument. It is a 'ringwork', a small moated and fortified site dating from the 12th century or earlier.

Immediately after The Crump, we turn right onto a lane.

After a while the lane becomes the entrance to Park House Farm. We keep ahead along a short stretch of concrete roadway that leads to Berden water tower. We go straight ahead, through a small farmyard area and past the water tower on our right. We then continue straight ahead on a grassy field-edge path with hedgerow on the right.

After 100 yards, when the field edge bears left, we turn right into bushes and then left. The path now runs for a quarter of a mile through a narrow, straight strip of woodland.

The woodland was probably planted to hide the industrial area that lies to our left - Pelham Electricity Transformer Station.

After a while, the footpath passes what appears to be a former brick-built sentry box on the right. Soon afterwards, we reach a road, the approach road to the electricity substation on our left. This large establishment, constructed in the 1960s, is part of the National Grid, redistributing electricity to balance supply and demand. Every giant pylon for miles around is connected to this place, carrying a total of six sets of high voltage power lines across the countryside.

To our right, the approach road goes past a series of giant battery units. They help to balance energy supply and demand by storing surplus electricity and releasing it as and when required.

Our route goes straight across the road but, first, let's take a few paces towards the metal fencing. There, possibly partly hidden behind containers, you will find county signs, side by side, for both Essex and Hertfordshire. The county boundary passes between the signs and heads South through the substation.

After inspecting the county signs, we retrace back up the road a few yards and turn left onto the footpath (immediately opposite where we came onto the road). By crossing the road, our route has crossed from Essex to Hertfordshire, from Berden parish to Stocking Pelham parish. The footpath goes through Pelham Nature Reserve, supported by National Grid.

After a while we pass a pond on the right. Immediately after the pond, we follow the path to the right, go through a gateway, pass between ponds and through a short stretch of woodland. We emerge onto a green, Crabb's Green.

Cross the green and turn right onto a roadway, Crabb's Lane. Pass 17th-century Crabb's Green Farmhouse on the right and follow the lane round to the left. We stay on this lane for a quarter of a mile.

At the end of Crabb's Lane we come into Stocking Pelham village. On the left is thatched 17th-century Silver Birches and on the right 18th-century White Hart Farm, just before a small triangular green with oak tree.

We turn left onto the road, Ginns Road. We should cross when safe to face any oncoming traffic. On the right, we pass two or three older houses and then come to several large 21st-century houses that were built in the grounds of what was The Cock Inn, a 16th-century thatched pub that was destroyed by fire in 2008. One of these 'houses' is due to become the replacement pub but, at the time of writing, it waits to find an owner. It bears little resemblance to the former pub, pictured here in 2003.

On the left is 17th-century Cockswood.

To the right, Stocking Pelham's village sign stands on the small green opposite the pub site. This was erected in 2024, largely funded by a grant from The Hundred Parishes Society.

We do not turn right, but follow the road round to the left, signposted towards Furneux Pelham – pronounced "Furnix". We pass the former telephone kiosk on the right – now housing an informal "library".

We soon pass Stocking Pelham Village Hall on the left. It was built as the village school in 1874 and continued as such until 1918. It then served a variety of community purposes before becoming the village hall in 1955.

We pass Croft on the left with a neat lychgate entrance. Soon afterwards, we leave the 30mph section of road and, in another 100 yards the road bends to the left. At this point, we turn right across a ditch on a wooden footbridge onto Stocking Pelham Footpath 1.

We turn right along a field-edge path with hedgerow on the right.

At the end of this long field, we keep to the right and cross a wooden footbridge with wooden handrails onto a lane, where we turn left.

We continue along the lane for about 150 yards until we reach the church. Shortly before it, we pass Stocking Pelham Hall, built 1877 and mostly hidden behind trees, and then a 17th-century barn, much larger than the church and now converted to residential use.

Stocking Pelham's parish church is dedicated to St Mary. The present building dates from the 14th century, but the circular churchyard suggests that this has been sacred ground since Saxon times, many years before. The size of the church reflects the fact that it serves a small community, Stocking Pelham's population never having risen above 200. If the church is open, please do visit. The belltower has just one bell, cast in London around 1390 AD and one of the oldest in Hertfordshire.

From the church, we turn left and retrace along the lane.

We pass the footbridge on the right where we joined the lane and in another 100 yards turn left onto footpath 2, crossing a wooden footbridge with wooden handrails and passing through a kissing gate. We keep straight ahead with a hedgerow on the right.

At the end of the field, we pass beneath an oak tree and through another kissing gate. Here, there is a notice declaring that the field we have just walked through is "a medieval ridge and furrow pasture which is being managed to maintain its historical interest and improve its value for wildlife".

We keep straight ahead on a wide field-edge path with hedgerow and a series of oak trees on the right.

As we walk along this field, to our right is Stocking Farm, a large 17th-century farmhouse.

Soon after Stocking Farm, we reach woodland at the end of the field. At the corner of the field, we turn right over a wooden footbridge with no handrails and, on the other side, immediately turn left into a new field with the woodland on our left.

We soon come to the end of this field and, from the top left corner, we must turn left along a short stretch of permissive footpath. This short path is sometimes churned up by horse riders.

At the end of this short section of path we come into a field where we turn right, at the same time passing from Stocking Pelham into the parish of Brent Pelham & Meesden.

We follow the field-edge path, heading North, with hedgerow on the right, again passing many oak trees.

Over to the left, about 600 yards away, the tall 17th-century chimney stacks of Beeches gradually come more and more into view.

After following this field edge for about 600 yards (since we passed from Stocking Pelham into Brent Pelham), we reach a corner of our long field, where the hedgerow turns sharp left. From this corner of the field, we turn sharp right past an ancient gate post and through the hedge before following the path down a short steep bank and across a ditch, into a new field. We keep straight ahead, now heading East, with a hedgerow on the right.

After about 300 yards, at the end of this field, we go straight ahead through the hedgerow and cross a ditch. By crossing the ditch, we have returned to Essex and to Berden. Immediately turn right. In about 30 yards, turn left, keeping a hedge on the right.

After about 100 yards, follow the field edge round to the left. In another 50 yards, we reach a waymark and turn sharp right through the hedgerow onto a clear path through woodland. Soon, the path emerges from the woodland onto Dewes Green.

Keep straight ahead across the green, heading south-east and passing 16th-century Dewes Green Farm on the left. Continue ahead, now on Dewes Green Road which we will use for the next half mile. We pass Lint House on the right and later Berden Priory Farm over to the left.

This lane eventually brings us back into Berden. After a gentle climb, we come to the start of newer houses on the right. On the left is the thatched Old King's Head, a former pub and now beautifully maintained. The timber-framed and plastered building dates from the 17th century.

At the end of the lane, we keep left of the small green and cross the new road with care to turn left along the pavement. We soon pass Vicarage Lane on the right.

When the pavement ends, we should cross with care back to the left and cross the entrance to Bonnetting Lane.

On the left we pass several houses dating from the 16th or 17th century. The first of these is Martin's Green, a former farmhouse whose upper storey is jettied out beyond the lower storey.

On the right is the former post office and store, dating from the 17th or 18th century and retaining its shop front.

As we approach a junction, we should cross – with care - to the right.

We turn right at the corner (signposted to Lt London) and should pause to look back to the former White House Farmhouse. It dates from the 16th century and now comprises two dwellings, Ivy Cottage and Holly Cottage.

On the green, Berden's 3-dimensional village sign features a piglet and wheatsheaf.

We continue past more attractive and varied houses. We come to a row of houses on the left called The Raven, taking their name from the pub which once stood here. We pass the entrance to St Nicholas Field on the right and soon return to where we started this walk. If you didn't visit the church at the start of the walk, you might like to do so now – there is a description of the church on page 1.
